Richard Steele, undergraduate of the course BSc Computing for games, is conducting a research project and would like to invite you to take part. Before you decide, you should familiarize yourself with what it would involve for you.

For this study you are asked to play through a level of a first-shooter game. It should take 10-15 minutes to complete and statistics on your play test will be collected and analysed as part of the study. The statistics are collected anonymously and confidentially, and no personal information other than a self-assessed grade of experience of first-person shooter games will be asked. No information that is collected and stored can be used to identify you.

Any personal data that you provide is protected by law in the United Kingdom under the EU General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR). This means that data collected must only be used for the purpose of scholarly enquiry and will not be disclosed to any person or organisation not directly connected with this project. As such, responses are held securely, are confidential, and are collected in a secure manner. Further to this, your participation in this project is subject to the Code of Research Ethics of the higher education institution in which you are enrolled: Falmouth University. Data will be archived for the maximum period of time permitted under these regulations: 2 years.

The results of this study, and future work based on the outcomes of this study, will form a part of broad multi-institution research project; excerpts of which may be published in journals and conference proceedings.

Please note, it is not compulsory to take part in this study, and you can withdraw at any time without consequences.

If you have any queries or concerns, please contact rs195256@falmouth.ac.uk. If you have any complaints regarding the ethical aspects of this project, please contact the Falmouth University Research & Development Office at research@falmouth.ac.uk or 01326 259247.

1. I have read the information provided above and I understand that the survey is being conducted for the sole purpose of academic research. I acknowledge that participation is voluntary and any data I provide will be treated anonymously, confidentially and will be subject to rigorous data protection. I am also happy for my contributions to appear in a scholarly publication, on the condition that all such contributions are anonymous. Therefore, I consent to my involvement:
